INAUGURATION

Dr. Francis Stevenson Hutchins, who came from China to follow in the educational footsteps of his father, William J. Hutchins, was inaugurated November 25, 1939, as the fifth President of Berea College. The inaugural ceremony was held in the presence of official representatives from more than two hundred colleges and universities. Phelps-Stokes Chapel, well filled with college students, faculty members, workers, and friends of Berea College, was the scene of the event.

Dr. W. D. Weatherford, assistant to the President of Fisk University and vice-chairman of the Berea College Board of Trustees, presided at the ceremony. In his welcome to the delegates, Dr. Weatherford pointed out that ninety per cent of the students of Berea are from the Southern Appalachian Mountain region. Berea, he declared, is dedicated "to the dignity of labor," explaining that every student must work with his hands two hours a day. This labor "takes the place of high powered athletics." He referred to Berea College as "an institution founded by plain and simple people."

Dr. Stewart W. McClelland, President of Lincoln Memorial University, delivered the response for the delegates of the educational institutions and declared that Berea "is a great institution with a great future. The future of Berea will remain intact under Dr. Francis Hutchins."

In the main address of the day, Dr. Frank Porter Graham, President of the University of North Carolina, discussed the economic and educational inequalities of the South. Referring to Berea College as "one of the temples of American freedom," Dr. Graham said that "freedom can be protected by the advance of equality of opportunity. Liberty can be raised to higher levels by the widening of social security."

Dr. Hutchins, who served in China for fifteen years as teacher, and later representative of the American Board of Yale-in-China, was presented by William Dean Embree, New York attorney and trustee of Berea College. Dr. Albert Buckner Coe, Pastor of the First Congregational Church of Oak Park, Illinois, pronounced the benediction.

Immediately following the morning ceremonies, a luncheon for the delegates was held in Boone Tavern. Dean Thomas P. Cooper, of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture, presided at this luncheon. Speakers were Dr. Donald J. Cowling, President of Carleton College, who discussed "The Support and Control of Education," and Dr. Clyde E. Wildman, President of DePauw University, who spoke on "Higher Education Faces the Future."

The inauguration was brought to a close on November 26 with the inaugural sermon delivered by Dr. Edwin McNeill Poteat, Pastor of the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Cleveland, Ohio. His subject was "Prophet or King?"

Trustees present for the inauguration included: Richard Bentley, Chicago; Barry Bingham, Louisville; Dr. Albert Buckner Coe, Oak Park, Ill.; Thomas J. Davis, Cincinnati; William Dean Embree, New York; Allen Foster, New York; Joel E. Goldthwait, Boston; Louis J. Karnosh, Cleveland; C. N. Manning, Lexington; Carl T. Michel, Kansas City; Seth Low Pierrepont, Ridgefield, Conn.; Charles Ward Seabury, Chicago; James L. Stuart, Pittsburgh; A. E. Thompson, Medina, Ohio; and W. D. Weatherford, Nashville.

DR. FRANK PORTER GRAHAM
President, University of N. C.

All who have gathered in this room this morning are interested in education for one reason or another. Some of us are involved in administration, engaged in research or actual teaching, some are students seeking an education, and others are admiring or critical friends of our institutions of learning.

To return from a foreign land and investigate the colleges and universities of the United States, is to recognize with pride the achievements of our country. A visitor from abroad might spend many happy months visiting our libraries, laboratories, classrooms, gymnasiums, and dormitories.

While we always show visitors our campus, as educators we are even prouder of our faculties, their ability in discovering new truths, their ability to lead the thinking of students. We rightly believe that the faculty is the crux of the entire educational process. It is our hope that we may provide these men and women with the requirements for their best work, libraries, laboratories, and freedom. We wish these men and women to instruct and stimulate their students, to lead them to a basic, sound understanding of our world and its culture, to aid them in forming attitudes of minds which will enable them to meet courageously the situations of life.

We are very proud too of our students. We select them with discrimination, we nurture them as carefully as we can, we graduate them when they have fulfilled certain requirements.

Viewing the beautiful campuses of American colleges and universities, noting the faculties with their highly degreed quality, thinking of the million students in institutions of higher learning (some nineteen thousand in the State of Kentucky alone), may we not then face with complacency the world, with the conviction that nothing is going to happen, that everything is all right? May we not hold the belief, that all that we need is more college graduates? Will not the problems of our world be solved, little by little? Shall not we enter then upon a new high plane, not only of economic prosperity, but also moral well-being and spiritual growth? We know that complacency is not for us.

Anyone who has roamed from his home country will have noticed the constant intermingling of ideas, culture, and goods from one nation to another.

In spite of this world-wide exchange of ideas in which our colleges and universities take a leading part, in spite of the economic net work thrown over the whole world, we find that nations are today fighting, or preparing to fight.

There are aspects of our own national situation which cause us the greatest distress. No one would think of blaming the public educational system for these situations, nor the colleges and universities. No American would advocate less education as a means of solving these problems. . . . . .

In accepting the Presidency of Berea College, I should like to formulate, in general terms at least, what appear to be guiding principles for the present.

In coming to Berea one finds certain assumptions basic to Berea's way of life:

1) Berea's doors are open to young men and young women from the Southern mountains. This is in keeping with the history of Berea. Conditions have changed rapidly in recent years, but there is no indication that this particular restriction has been outlived.

2) Labor is not only a part of the economic life of our students, but it is also a distinctively educative process.

3) A third assumption is that the finest education in this country should be available to the young men and women of the mountains, regardless of geographic or economic handicaps.

4) A final fundamental assumption is that a vital relationship with God as exemplified in the life of Jesus Christ, has a place in the foundation of our individual and corporate life. The Preamble of the Constitution of Berea College begins with these words: "In order to promote the cause of Christ . . ."

On these foundation stones Berea College stands.

With these assumptions in mind as basic to the life of Berea, I would propose no radical scheme which might by its novelty be applauded. Berea must keep close to the real needs of the region she serves.

—(From the INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT HUTCHINS)

DR. EDWIN McNEILL POTEAT
Pastor, Euclid Ave. Baptist Church, Cleveland

I believe that Berea must make available to her students the very finest academic education. We surely do not wish, any more than any other college wishes, to graduate robot scholars who raise their right or left arm or hand in unison to salute the great what-not. Each student is an individual, capable of understanding in some degree the background of our nation, the ideas which form our culture and ways of living, capable in some degree of thinking for the future. Each is capable, too, of understanding and carrying with him something of art and music, of perceiving the meaning of true religion and its place in our daily life.

If we could build a wall about Kentucky, or the Appalachians, we might minimize the importance of the work which we do. This we cannot do. We are citizens of a nation, not a region. It is reported that in 1930, more than 800,000 Kentucky born persons were living elsewhere in the U.S. "With the South furnishing the basis for the population increase of the nation" according to a recent Federal report, we must demand that the quality of the academic work we do, be the very finest. We must do this not only for the sake of the individual students, but for his place in the nation.

If we know anything about the Berea student, and the young man and woman that are likely to be Berea students in the coming decades, we know that after the years spent in formal study, they are going to be forced to earn a living. We know that our society is demanding the services of men and women qualified to make contributions in some particular field.

Now Berea, in addition to and through the general cultural courses of the college, is preparing professionally teachers, those who will promote agriculture, those who have at heart the improving of our home life—those who serve the sick and aid in programs to prevent disease. I would suggest that there may be additional fields of work in which Berea may give preparation to her students. These await study and consideration.

I would not lose sight of the fact that the essential need in the community is for rounded personalities, men and women who think clearly and act unselfishly. The core of our curriculum must always be those cultural subjects which will enable us to think, and understand the world in which we live.

A college course has been described as a "four year loaf." Another described it as "sitting on a mountain peak to get a proper view of the world." If the four year loaf, or the sitting on top of the mountain, resulted in clarity of thought, a knowledge of life and modes of living, with the items arranged in proper perspective, that would be fine.

If a student leaves the doors of Alma Mater with no greater clarity of thought, he steps down from his mountain top into clouds of discouragement and despair. His education has not yet begun.

It is my sincere hope while helping to equip our students with basic conceptions for life in the coming decades, we may also make it possible for many to find the curricula suitable for assisting them in making a distinct contribution to society.

It is unnecessary to argue the point that Berea is more than an ordinary college. One of its most important characteristics is that it reaches off the campus into the community. In China colleges have walls about them. In some cases, colleges in the United States have invisible walls about them. Perhaps we have already undertaken too much, but I am bold enough to suggest that Berea should continue to intertwine and interweave the life of the campus with the life of the people who live in the regions about us. When our teachers and students carry new thoughts, new conceptions, new solutions for old problems to communities off the campus, and bring back to the campus a more realistic view of the world and our educational problems, they are fulfilling the purpose of the institution. Such contacts prevent us from developing a white collar superiority, and from suffocating in the fumes of our own laboratories.

In accepting the Presidency of Berea, I do so with the knowledge that Berea has been most fortunate during the years to have the loving aid and cooperation of many institutions, public and private. I rejoice in these cordial relations, which have bound us together in a common cause, enlarging our usefulness. I would hope in the years to come that these ties of affection and cooperation, increasing our effectiveness in the cause of education, might be strengthened.

—(From the INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT HUTCHINS)

TO THIS HERITAGE . . .

"I do not know another institution that is doing a more necessary work among native Americans of fine natural capacities, who have been denied the chance that should be theirs for higher education. I earnestly wish you success."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

"I do not see how anybody can think of Berea and the work it has to do without catching fire."

WOODROW WILSON

"You always have my best wishes and my belief that you are nobly performing a noble work."

JUSTICE OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES

THE PAST YEAR HAS ADDED THESE . . .

"I have come to know and to love an institution which has for more than eighty years been the inspiration of thousands of young people."

. . . . . STEWART W. McCLELLAND, President, Lincoln Memorial University.

"Berea College in the persons of its distinguished, nobly useful, and beloved President Emeritus and President Elect, in the strength of its great traditions and the robustness of its clear purpose, moves us to a new realization of the spiritual value of its high simplicity above all the complexity and confusion of our modern world.

"Berea lifts above triteness and makes vivid the significance of the individual and the sacredness of personality. Study of books, work with the hands, play and sports, student government, learning and living, all join in the making of self-reliant individuals, integrated personalities, with the whole view toward intelligent social adjustments, as the students respond to the inner glimpses of their nobler selves and a nobler society."

. . . . . FRANK PORTER GRAHAM, President, University of North Carolina.

"On our campus here at Berea are fine buildings and splendid modern equipment which testify to great progress and achievement, but what we prize most is that which we possess here which was not wrought with human hands, that priceless something which we may call the Berea tradition; the composite spirit of all the courageous self-sacrificing, and loyal devotion of those who have gone before and those who now carry on that same pattern."

"It is a far easier task to find a president for Yale, Harvard or Princeton than to find a suitable president for Berea College. In this field God asks for a very special service, a service that only an unusual and consecrated leader can give.

"And now again in the choice of a new president we feel sure that we have been divinely guided. He has in large measure the qualities which his distinguished father brought to the work. He has in large measure the qualities which have built up the fine Berea tradition."

. . . . .WILLIAM DEAN EMBREE

"An institution founded by humble people and working for and with humble people. An institution primarily interested in the kind of life our boys and girls may live after they leave us. An institution which believes in the dignity of labor and tries to make each student feel he is a partner with God in any creative task whether with mind or hand. An institution which believes the foundation of character is a firm conviction and a living experience with a living God, and hence desires that all its graduates shall know something of the way in which all people have experienced that God."

. . . . . W. D. WEATHERFORD

"I feel that Berea College is doing a unique and distinguished work in education. . . . . It has a warm place in my heart."

PUBLIC AFFAIRS FORUM

Within a single year the Public Affairs Forum has become one of the most vital organizations on the campus. The Forum provides a place where students and professors meet on an equal basis to discuss vexing national and international problems from all points of view. The purpose of the Forum is to provide a means whereby its members can become conscious of the numerous political, economic, and sociological complexities of the world.

Its major achievement has been the establishment of the Public Affairs Laboratory to which over four hundred organizations in the U.S. and several foreign countries have contributed material.

The Dramatic Club has been unusually active this year under the energetic direction of Dr. Earl W. Blank, who succeeded Dr. Raine. Through the cooperation of new members, and the work of the old members who act as student directors, the Tuesday night plays have been very successful in educating the club members in the fundamentals of dramatics.

The Spanish play, Zaragueta, by Miguel Ramos Carrion and Vital Aza, was presented in the fall under the student direction of Ruth Kilbourne. For the major spring production, the Club presented George Kelley's Pulitzer-Prize-winning play, Craig's Wife, under the student direction of Glendon Gabbard.

Another important spring production was the dramatization of facts from the life of Galileo, taken from Alfred Noyes' Watchers of the Sky, adapted by Hazel Parker and directed by Luther Chaney.

The Club has recently drawn up a constitution and has taken under its supervision the academy talent, a group which has had no dramatics organization since the "Strollers" were dissolved. On March 1, 1940, this group was accepted by The National Thespian Honorary Dramatics Society as Troupe 401.

The Dramatic Club is extremely grateful to Dr. Blank, Mr. Gough, and Mr Hackett, who have contributed invaluably to the year's work in dramatics through their advice, their patience, and their willing service.

On March 1, 1940, Berea College, Secondary Division, received word that the National Thespian Honorary Dramatic Society for High Schools had accepted Berea as troupe four hundred one. On Tuesday, March 12, the troupe had its first meeting and adopted the name DAVID GARRICK TROUPE after the great English actor.

The officers elected for this year are: Emmett Keyser, President; Elizabeth Longmire, Vice President; Cherry Churchill, Secretary; Tony Bent, Treasurer. Charlene Chappell, Edna Chaney, William Welsh, Lyell Thomas, and Kay Hoffsommer complete the Charter membership roll. Lyell Thomas has been appointed publicity chairman.

The organization adopted a local constitution written by Emmett Keyser and Cherry Churchill. A late spring initiation is being planned.

The National Thespian Society is the only honorary dramatic society for high schools in the United States. It has four hundred three troupes in forty-five states and the Panama Canal Zone. It publishes The High School Thespian Magazine seven times a year. Its national office is in Cincinnati.

The aim of the society is "To create a spirit of active and intelligent interest in dramatics among the boys and girls of our secondary schools."

Earl W. Blank is the faculty sponsor of the troupe. At present, Dr. Blank is also National Director of the Thespian Society.

CARL SANDBURG
Commencement Speaker

Not until he was thirty-six years old was Sandburg recognized in the literary world. Now, at the age of sixty-two, he is hailed as the poet laureate of industrial America. He has seen life, many-faceted and changing, and in his strong, sweeping verse, has recorded what he saw. He sings news songs, unforgettable songs, about things and people unsung before.

Sandburg is no stranger to the dignity—or indignity—of labor. He knows America because he has worked alongside sweating Americans in unromantic tasks, has listened to their speech and has felt their fury, their joy and despair. He has been porter in a barber shop, scene-shifter in a third-rate theatre, truck-handler in a brickyard, turner-apprentice in a pottery, dish-washer in Denver and Omaha hotels, harvest hand in Kansas wheatfields. He has worked as advertising manager of a department store, as politician, and as salesman, pamphleteer and newspaperman.

Sandburg lives all over America, but the place to which he always returns is Michigan, where he lives on a hilltop overlooking Lake Michigan.

COOL TOMBS

When Abraham Lincoln was shoveled into the tombs, he forgot the copperheads and the assassin . . . in the dust, in the cool tombs.

And Ulysses Grant lost all thought of con men and Wall Street, cash and collateral turned ashes . . . in the dust, in the cool tombs.

Pocahontas' body, lovely as a poplar, sweet as a red haw in November or a paw-paw in May, did she wonder? does she remember? . . . in the dust, in the cool tombs?

Take any streetful of people buying clothes and groceries, cheering a hero or throwing confetti and blowing tin horns . . . tell me if the lovers are losers . . . tell me if any get more than the lovers . . . in the dust . . . in the cool tombs.

—Carl Sanburg

(Reprinted by permission of the publishers.)

Outside new leaves have formed on the twisted oak, and above the sound of all the voices I hear the hard scratch of a squirrel's claws on broken bark. Under the window, there, they call for me. "Come! Hurry!" Kelley's voice is urgent. But I cannot come. I shall not hurry. It will require some deliberation, this ending. I have watched too often the sun on the mountains yonder to shut off the sight abruptly. I shall need to rehearse, in my mind, the casual turn, the six steps that will take me to the door. This is something I have not learned: how to quit a room before you have taken yourself from it.

It is cool here and dark. The torn green shades are lowered, and high in the corner a spider web swings in a little wind. There, across the desk chair, my black graduation gown hangs limp, looking somehow foolish without its pasteboard cap. My hand lies warm in a little pool of sunlight on the window sill; and across the hedge, beyond the drive, sun bursts over the red bricks of Music Building. In my heart, though, there is no sun. Standing here, cupping in my hand the pool of sunlight, I am grown quite cold and still.

This is the end of it, I tell myself, twisting the onyx ring on my finger. Now, no more than the ending of a life, no less than the last note of a song, it is over. And that, in itself, is good. I would not stay, reluctant as I am to go. But I need to get things straight with myself.

This morning, early, a girl came into this room, wearing alligator shoes. She looked about with slow, dark glances. "I lived here once," she said.

I was concerned with the folds of my graduation gown, and the surge of the chapel organ swept through my mind, muting the memory undertones in her voice. I looked down at her shining shoes and I wanted to say: "You have found other rooms, have you not?" But I said nothing, because I looked at the lines about her mouth and knew what she would answer. She would say: Yes, yes, of course. But there are things that do not come again. There are things you did and will not do again. There are faces that you knew and will not see again; voices you heard that are quiet now. There are things you feel and cannot say.

Now she is gone and all the others, too are gone—all but my friends who stand below the window, there, amid worn baggage, calling to me. Memory, I said once, is only a looking back, an indulgence, like rocking chairs, for palsied wit. But in this bare room I choose to forget that I said it, as I turn about and face my memories.

At that scarred desk I have sat late, late, running unsteady fingers through my hair, writing on yellow paper, while the wind swept cold from the western mountains and stung my bare arms . . . . There have been nights when fearsome storms broke and rumbled over the mountains . . . . There have been evenings, long, quiet when friends have knocked and entered here and we have laughed together . . . . Once, facing that wall, I cried long, bitterly, then spat at it in hate of my weakness . . . . And once, on that same wall, I penciled: Beloved Pan and all ye other gods who haunt this place, give me beauty in the inward soul, and may the outward and the inward man be at one . . . .

I gather up the robe from the desk-chair and I am glad that it is black . . . . Lost to me, now, are all the faces and the voices that I knew. Kelley, and the laughter-fires in her eyes . . . . the slow unfolding of Chris' smile . . . . Helen, the silence of her understanding . . . . Lost to me the unnamed little gestures of those students I have known. On dark stairs, in a city unknown to me, I shall pass only strangers. Never Sully again, never Kitty, Lucille, or Patton . . . . Quick the movements of my memory: Severina, small and dark, teeth white in a smile.

"Come on, Plato," he says to Cecil. "Let's go on up to philosophy class." And Cecil, smiling lazily. "Go on up, Aristotle. I'm coming soon's my girl gets back" . . . . the lean sensitivity of Clarke's face; words that once he wrote and brought to me . . . . Frank, his ready, off-side grin . . . . and Hal, quiet, striding tall beside me under flaming trees in autumn.

Lodged in crevices of my mind, some words brought away from classes. "Human rights are relative. Labor has to fight for rights; property rights are absolute"—Dr. Muelder, pacing over the old brown floor, driving home his point with spike-edged logic and his index finger, his Phi Beta Kappa key bouncing and gleaming as he walks back and forth. A thin man, thinking, I described him once in my loose-leaf notebook . . . . May B. Smith, stalking about in the wind, white hair flying, coat flapping out behind her. "But then one remembers that it is the fire that matters most. The fire of industry, of purpose, of an open mind, the fire of a friendly spirit," she said once, nodding vigorously . . . . And Miss Emily Ann, brown eyes bright on her Art of Writing class. "I'm going to lay a curse on you, the curse of consciousness." She said this, slim fingers moving restlessly.

Who can say what I have lost with the passing of these things? Who can know what I shut the door on when I leave this room?

. . . . I would be content to stay here a little longer. But the voices under the window are edged with impatience. "Hurry! Hurry!" Kelley is shouting. The spider web in the corner shivers in the breeze. The turn is made; the six steps taken. The door closes behind me with a little sound.

A Fool There Was

I allus said a woman don't never get too old to get herself a man. Look at my gran-gal, Gensie. You'd a thought she were beyont all hopes, lessen she took one with a cast in his eye, string-halted, or a widder-man with six younguns. Gensie were thought past the age of getting a man of the kind gals want. She were twenty-five last corn-cutting. Not that she weren't fair-favored —la, all us Finchie women has allus been good-favored (though I, her granny, shouldn't say it, seeing's I'm so warty-looking myself, but then you can't judge the rose by looking at the hip.) She didn't look a day over eighteen or nineteen; so blue-eyed and rosy-red coloring. We never thought of her getting a first-choice man at her age. For one thing, the gal'd spent the last fifteen years caring for her pa who'd been left a poor fool from spotted-tongue fever back yander—helpless as a baby. She'd been right at home and didn't know no marrying fellers. Maybe she'd swore off, seeing what shape a man could get in and what trouble they could be to women. Anyway, what did come courting she put off and laughed at till they finally quit. She paid this no mind though, but helped Cyth-Ann, her ma, weave, garden, take care of her pa, and was allus busy.

Till last fall her pa up and died. Now, he'd kept her so busy she were lost when he were gone. She tried everything but just couldn't be content. She fretted, lost her taste, and got real poor. Cyth-Ann and me got worried. We axed Brother Arrowood to stop in atter the October Memorial meeting. He talked to her, and they decided to write up a piece and send it off yander to the papers to get her another fool like her poor pa'd been, to take care of, cause, atter all, that's what she knowed best to do. He said she'd be happier, and make herself some money, too, a thing gals are a-bound to do these days.

She just about rode Matt-mule to death going trying to hear from this. One day she rid in home with a big letter. It said a feller from Virginia, David Welles, wanted to be her fool border, offered twenty dollars a week (school teachers around here pay that a month!) They writ a spell, and at Thanksgiving he come. We hired Big John Coombs and Matt Paxton to haul him home sending straw in the wagon and ropes to tie him not knowing but he might be hog-wild.

Hit were a sight how they got him tied, he were so soft-tongued and stout-armed. You know Big John can break a plowline when he's drunk; but he couldn't handle him by hisself. Finally they got him tied in the wagon but all three were bad barked up.

When they got in Gensie met them. They'd let him walk apiece, both holding his arms, the roads being so bad and him so civil. "But where's the fool?" she asked, sharp-tongued.

"Here, Gensie; and wild as a buck-rabbit," Matt Paxton drawled.

Now hit were easy seen he weren't in one of his wild spells, didn't even look touched a-tall. Gensie asked right to his teeth, "Are ye a fool like ye writ, or are ye only aping?"

He let out a stream of talk in this slow heart-gripping voice you only hear out of two or three men in a life time. 'Peared like off yander "fool" don't mean what it does to us mountainers, a helpless, sensibleless idiot; but a person at does some silly unthoughted thing. He'd seen her piece in the paper, and, world-weary, had writ to get away from his bosom-buddies because of some piece of stuff he'd done.

Well, sir, them two laughed in each others faces and fell in love, like that. You looked at the two together and saw they fit like your two hands or the halves of an apple. They went towards each other and stayed thar. Come Christmas eve, Gensie, though she were twenty-five, married one of the masterousest, lovingest men ever a maiden dreamed of . . . .

They's many a woman at thinks she is getting a man at gets a fool, but Gensie thought she were getting a fool and got herself a man!

There are those who sleep in class and there are those who sleep in class. Cecil is the recognized leader of the latter small yet select group. True, the difference between Cecil and any ordinary nodder is only one of degree, but the degree is great.

Probably the secret of his success lies in an extraordinary speed of transition from alert wakefulness to a dead sleep, or the reverse. Having stationed himself where some broad back cuts off the professor's view, Cecil is "at rest" immediately after the roll call. His eyes close, facial muscles relax and, almost before the lecture begins, his head settles down on his chest. This he accomplishes with a bare minimum of the nodding which is a give-away to the ordinary morphetic student.

Obviously superior as a class sleeper, Cecil reaches his most exalted heights in awakening. The ordinary dozer, aroused by some unusual noise, jerks himself upright. Invariably the sudden movement attracts the attention of the professor. Not so, an artist. If you watch Cecil carefully you will see his eyes open and "take the lay of the land" before he moves. If he becomes conscious of pedagogical glances, he begins to read very industriously without raising his head. This gives the professor, who has been unable to see his eyes, the impression that he has been reading all the time.

There are many other tricks to the trade for a master. Simple precautions give added security. Cecil never drops a pencil when he goes to sleep for he has tucked it away in a pocket. "All four legs of the chair on the floor" is a rule which prevents his having a major catastrophe. Little things, these, yet care for details distinguishes any great artist.

In the Mood

TP's is a "melting pot" where high school and college students mingle with the single purpose of loafing. It has an easy atmosphere of friendliness and gives an impression of confusion as the music from the nickelodian merges with the laughter of happy people and becomes snatches of meaningless, unrelated sounds.

At the table where the gang has gathered, Parker leans far back in her chair and laughs a strange mixture of keen and husky laughter. She laughs because she is happy in a group of happy people. Across the table from her, Hal fidgets with his hat, pushing it back on his head, pulling it low over his eyes as he tries to get her attention.

TP has noticed Cecil's waving arm and starts toward the table, smiling and saying, "Well, what'll it be folks—four coffees?" "Yeh," someone answers, "make it four, no five. Here comes that lazy Carson Auxier."

At the next table, Dot is saying, "Yeh, I've made up my mind. I'm going to make an "A" under Henderson. Got to make at least one "A" and I certainly can't make one under Muelder, not in political philosophy anyhow."

This reminds Kelley that she didn't do so well on Henderson's last quiz. "You see," she explains, "since this is my first course under him, I decided not to study and see what happened—it did!"

Carson tells the gang how queer it is to be calling Anna Born "Miss Born" this year. He and Cecil are taking German under Anna and must forget that they were classmates last year, at least while they are in class. "By the way, Cecil, do you know the German for . . . ." The rest of the question is drowned in a burst of laughter from a table of academy students. These students act their age, a little embarrassed by the presence of college seniors. The boys loll in their chairs and talk in loud, bragging voices or hold the hands of little blond girls—just to show the other fellows that they have a way with the women. The girls giggle and lean across the table to tell one another secrets. They have fun doing silly things such as making whistles from straws.

Somewhere an irate college student says viciously, "I wish those damn high schoolish brats would quit making that racket. Another minute of it and I'm going mad, completely mad." A friend of his joins in bitterly. "Yeah," buddy, I wasted a whole nickel to hear 'Indian Summer.' Helluva chance I have."

Looking at his watch, Carson exclaims, "Say, TP, how about rushing that coffee over our way? After all, I do have a committee meeting in ten minutes." Carson is always rushing off to some sort of meeting.

With a tray hoisted above his head, TP carefully picks his way through people and tables. On the tray there is coffee, hot, steaming, delicious, and black; and there's a can of "Pet" milk with the holes in the top all clogged up, and a high-necked container of sugar.

Blake measures his sugar in a spoon, carefully. "If I don't measure it, I might cheat myself," he explains. "After all, I've got to get my money's worth, and besides TP makes too much profit as it is." Everyone laughs, but they don't care how much profit he makes. They like his place and they like his coffee.

Everyone's attention is turned to Bill Joe Gray who is pounding his fists on the counter, shouting, "Bartender! Bartender! How about a glass of water to chase that last cuppa coffee!"

When the music stops—it's "Tuxedo Junction"—Parker feels deep in her old trench coat. She brings out her hand with a nickel between two fingers. "I'm going to play 'In the Mood' before we leave."

As the sweet and persuasive music swells into the room, everyone begins bouncing up and down on the modernistic, steel-tubing chairs. Dot shouts hilariously, 'Berea College may keep us from dancing, but it can't keep us from wiggling." The music dies away and someone says, "Well, let's go to the Library." Reluctant to leave TP's and its relaxed confusion, people begin pulling their coats and books from the tangled mass that is piled high on one of the counters. It is time to study.

University Babble

The parlor in Elizabeth Rogers was quiet as I settled into the big chair nearest the radio and began shuffling through the pages of Dante's Divine Comedy. I had just found my place in the Third Circle, reserved for the gluttonous, when Scott and Charlie, wearing casual tweeds and feathered hats, breezed into the room.

"Why, it's the BMOC!" I greeted them cordially. "Back already to our conservative campus. Didn't I always say you couldn't stand the pace at State?"

"You err, Princess," replied Scott, seating himself on the arm of my chair. "The University was boring this week-end, so we took off. There's a dance at the gym tonight, but Jimmy's orchestra plays and it smells."

"You ain't lyin'!" agreed Charlie, relaxing on one of our prim love seats. "Say, Scott!" he exclaimed, "Guess who I got a date with for the Sigma Chi banquet Friday night. Nobody but Martha Carroll—and she's a card!"

Scott looked bored. "Ah, she's not so hot. Jane's a better date—she's a Tri Delt too. Say, have you seen that number visiting her? Bill dated her some. He says she's pu-lenty sexy!"

"Yeah. That's what I like about her," agreed Charlie. "By the way, who do you think will be our "sweetheart" at the ball? Boy, the other houses will be green! We Sigma Chi's always get ahead of them. Grant Simmons—he's a Sigma Nu—said the SAE's were mad as hell because we got the orchestra first. They don't like us Sigs. They're a sorry bunch." Charlie paused, burying his body deeper in the soft plush and thrusting long legs over the back of the seat.

"Say, boys, do you remember Thelma Clayton?" I asked. "She's going to State now and I wondered if you ever see her."

"Oh, yeah . . . . sure. I think I saw her at the game Saturday," Scott said vaguely. "She isn't a pledge, is she, Charlie?"

"No," indifferently. This evidently eliminated Thelma.

With elaborate care, Charlie eased himself off the love seat and yawned. "Let's go have a beer, Scott."

Scott jumped up. "Ah, hell, Charlie, you said you'd quit. If I'd wrecked my car a hundred eighty dollars worth I'd never touch another drop."

"Ah, don't be a heel, Scott. Besides a beer won't make us drunk." He turned to me. "So long, Princess. Why don't you come over for the dance next week-end? Anything exciting happening here?"'

I thought a minute. "Uh-huh, the Kedroff Quartet's singing at the chapel," I hazarded.

"Oh," blankly. They hurried out.

When It Rains

"For the sixth and last time," your roommate says a bit wearily, at ten minutes after seven, "you'd better get up if you're going to class this morning."

Repressing an impulse to ask her if she's ever in her life been sleepy (she rises faithfully at six and goes to breakfast every morning) you drag yourself out of bed and pull on the first clothes you can find. The room is cold and gray. It's raining outside. You fish around in your closet for your umbrella, which has been relegated to the top shelf ever since the water supply got so low they had to turn off the showers, gulp a cup of strong coffee proffered by some well-meaning neighbor, grab a notebook, and run.

Seven thirty. Barely time to get to class, but of course you'll have to wait at the crossing while two or three cars whiz by through the gray slush and splatter your bare legs with the dirty water. During this interval you survey the ever-fresh panorama of the campus walks streaming with students desperately bent on reaching some destination before the next bell rings. A common grayness silvers everything, blending into one softened, hazy pattern the bright, animated umbrellas bobbing along through the rain-darkened trunks of the old trees. You realize with a start that the car you were waiting for passed all of three minutes ago, and that the annoyingly prompt professor will begin his inevitable, inexorable roll call within no more than sixty seconds.

Adjusting the angle of your umbrella you prepare to dash for it when you are stopped short by a cheery hail-fellow-well-met-and-whither-away-so-fast-today voice which you recognize as that of your present insomnia producer and you give up all hope—yea, and all desire—to get to class on time. You tell yourself that after all the major part of one's education comes not from classroom lectures, nor from privately pursued studies, but from the little personal contacts which one makes every day on the campus, then begin concerning yourself with the problem of entertaining this new quarry. You know there's no hope of inveigling him into carrying the umbrella over the two of you—he's either the tall, sleek-haired sheik who braves the weather bare-headed, or the short, cute lad who jams a battered felt hat over his almost irrepressibly curly pate and doesn't need an umbrella anyway. You'll have to carry your own books, too. They'd get wet if he took them.

You can't let a little thing like an umbrella come between you, though. How are you going to say all the clever things you've been storing up against this hour if he can't see your face as you say them? But on the other hand, if you tilt that oiled silk orb of protection over to the other side, your hair's going to get wet and draggled, and you'll wish he couldn't see you at all. You could wear a scarf over your head like most of the girls do, but somehow scarves tied under the chin are always faintly suggestive of senility to you—you'd never seen anybody but old women wear them until you came to college. Oh, well, suppose you do get a little wet just now. Maybe he won't notice it too much—the thoughtless wretch!

At your destination you bid him a reluctant and somewhat suggestive au revoir and hurry inside. There are glass panes in the doors, and you catch a disillusioning glimpse of yourself as you pass, realizing in that split second that the shine in your eyes is equalled if not surpassed and even dimmed by the shine on your nose, and that in spite of your careful manipulation of the umbrella the moisture has made hay of your hair while the sun wasn't shining; what once was a mass of docile curls has been reduced to limp strands of hair looking quite undecided as to just what is expected of them anyway.

Climbing the stairs you reflect rather grimly that the optimistic author of the little poem about "It isn't raining rain to me" couldn't have been a girl in need of a new permanent wave. Certainly by no flight of your own fancy will you ever mistake a deluge of violently reactionary H_2O for a shower of daffodils. And you hope that today's chapel speaker won't mention the water supply, nor consider our near-empty reservoir a well of wit for his self-appointed exploitation. You hate rain!

Night Message

The sea told me: You'll be starved—
You'll want—you'll nearly die with the aching, the reaching out and desiring
You'll know the pain of too much disappointment, be lonely
And go on reaching out and starving.

The sea told me: You'll be content
For moments dropped from the ceaseless rush of your never-ending quest
You'll, for a moment, be quiet
When there's caressing spring air and just a few stars
You'll cease for a moment to wish and follow and desire
You'll be almost happy.

The sea told me. I listened and was sad
I wanted, not sorrow and pain and too-great loneliness,
But happiness, men's love, and contentment
Yet knew without trying to know
That the sea said the truth;
That disappointment was the end of my wishing.
But the sea receded
And moon for a moment shone through a half-rift in clouds upon sea
The wind softened
And I was content—for a moment.

—Ivol Godbey

Pilgrim

I have walked a thousand miles tonight,
And my hungry soul is fed
On the silver sheen the moon lays down;
While around my tired feet
A slumbrous stream stirs slowly.

But come, the shadows beckon on,
Though I've walked a thousand miles tonight
A thousand more I'll go.
For my soul is a pilgrim soul.
My feet are pilgrim feet.

—Clarence Steinberger

Verses

I wonder why it is that we
    Who sagely watch the year's romances
Are able instantly to see
    Intentions deep within the glances
Received by them so heartlessly
    Who do not recognize advances.

The moon
Tonight is like
A scimitar, cutting
Through heavy clouds, a flashing blade
Of light.

DOWN IN THE SPORTS CORRAL

To those who have had their bit in the preserving of the sportsmanship brand of competition found in Mountaineer athletes on the hardwood, on the track and on the diamond . . . to those athletes who gave for the joy of giving and kept the ol' Berea spirit alive when hopes for a Blue and White victory were dim—this sports section of THE CHIMES is dedicated.

With this in mind the ol' Flash invites you and you and you to take a trip down to the sports corral this morning to see the Mountaineer in action.

INTER-DORM TOUCH FOOTBALL PARADE

For the first time since the days of Normal (eight years in fact) football returned to the Big Blue Campus,—this time, however, in the form of "touch," with some six elevens representing Howard, Pearsons, Guest House, Hunting, and Outside Dormitories. The championship went to the Basement Rats from Howard.

Boasting gridiron feats of two wins and a tie, the Crimson Tide eleven from Pearsons and the Basement aggregation from Howard clashed in Berea's bowl classic with Howard winning out 6-2 on an aerial and land attack in the fourth period of play after being outplayed on the defensive and offensive by the Pearsons eleven in the earlier part of the game.

CROSS COUNTRY

After a long period of intensive training, the Berea College Harriers were entered in the Shamrock Athletic Club's Cross Country meet at Louisville. The meet was one of those Berea thinlies will not forget for a long, long while as Bob Felton, Senior, finished third; Rex Wesley, Sophomore, fourth; Everett Hurst, Sophomore, fifth; and George Scherrer, Senior and team captain, came through with a sixth. The harriers from Berea copped the team trophy of the Shawnee Park Turkey Day run to win their first and last meet of the season.

SWIMMING

Due to a diminishing water supply, Seabury Pool early in November became an empty concrete bathtub. Home-coming arrived and the water carnival planned for the Alumni and the inauguration guests was called off despite the hint from the press that such an event might be staged on the banks of Silver Creek. In February came the rain and the Murray tankmen. The Thoroughbreds found very little resistance from the Berea tankmen and triumphed 50-15. The setback at the hands of Murray was the first and last for the Big Blue mermen of '40 as they proceeded to capture their next three in a row, dropping Morehead by the wayside twice and the Eastern tankmen once. Representing Berea for the last time in intercollegiate competition were Robert Felton and David Headley, Seniors.

TENNIS

The outlook for a successful season for the lads who represent the Big Blue on the clay courts is rather cloudy at the present moment as loss of more than half of the '39 squad through graduation has put gaps on the racket roster that will be hard to fill. Gone from the courts are Brooks, Lay, Boyce, and Brashear. Returning for another session with the Mountaineers are four college juniors in the person of Harold Walters, Estill Jones, Charlie Hale, and Karl Warming, and upon the shoulders of these men rest all future hopes of the Mountaineers for the season just ahead.

TRACK

Since 1932, when a certain young man fresh from the graduating ranks of Springfield organized track at Berea, the Mountaineer cindermen have carried away five state championship cups. Victorious in '38, edged out by the Western thinlies in '39, Berea's trackmen get under way in '40 with a determination that will have them climbing back on the band wagon with more front page copy when their first KIAC meet becomes a thing of yore.

For the first time in some years, the Mountaineers take the field without the silver lining, and the places left vacant by Clark, Goforth, Roberts, and Watson are going to be hard to replace. The honor of co-captaining the Trackmen of '40 goes to Earle Powell and John Caudill, hurdle and dash man, and distance runner, respectively.
